Professor Peter Rowe

The Law School, Lancaster University

Professor Peter Rowe teaches at the Law School, Lancaster University and was formerly Head of the Department of Law at the University of Liverpool from 1988-93. His recent book "The Impact of Human Rights Law on Armed Forces" (2006, Cambridge University Press) follows others studying the subject of his lecture. These include "Defence: The Legal Implications: Military Law and the Laws of War" and "The Gulf War 1990-91 in International and English Law" which he edited. He has given papers in many European countries, the USA and Australia. His research interests lie in the fields of military law and the international laws of war, publishing widely in journals in these fields, in addition to pieces on the law of evidence and tort. He has chaired the UK Group of the International Society for Military Law and the Laws of War.
